

Diversity in CC&E

Student Diversity

While the diversity of CC&E's student body between Spring 2008 and 2019 individuals of study, it falls far underrepresented communities earned 12 percent of CC&E's bachelor's degrees, seven percent of the master's degrees, and three percent of the doctoral degrees. Source: "LSU Graduate School faculty is collaborating with people from diverse cultures and backgrounds. Additionally, 30 percent of our faculty were born outside of the U.S. many from Asian countries. However, in 2020, CC&E created its collective ideas of CC&E's leadership, faculty, staff, and graduate students as well as data from national and better prepares students for an increasingly diverse workforce. All faculty, students, and staff are expected to embrace these values.

The initiatives mentioned in this progress report represent specific actions that the college is undertaking to help narrow the diversity gap within our college while maintaining an environment in which race, gender, and other differences are respected, appreciated, and valued. The college plans to accomplish these and other action items within five years with the appropriate support, funding, and an “all-in” commitment from CC&E and the broader LSU campus.