

When we describe the political philosophy of Plato and of Aristotle as classical political philosophy, we imply that it is the classic form of political philosophy. The classic was once said to be characterized by noble simplicity and quiet grandeur.... Classical political philosophy is non-traditional because it belongs to the fertile moment when all traditions were shaken, and there was not yet in existence a tradition of political philosophy.... From this it follows that the classical political philosophers see political things with a freshness and directness which have never been equaled. They look at political things in the perspective of the enlightened citizen or statesman.... They do not look at political things from the outside, as spectators of political life.

Course Website:

A course website will be available to registered students through the Moodle system.

Library Reserve:

The readings for the course will be available on reserve in Middleton Library, and many are available as well on the internet. In some cases the editions or translations may differ from those listed above; I strongly encourage you to use the translations of Plato selected here. Please check with me if using other editions creates confusion as to what material is assigned. In addition, I will from time to time place on reserve certain secondary works that I think you might find particularly useful in helping you interpret the authors we are studying and in locating their place in the tradition of political philosophy. It should go without saying that secondary works are no substitute for the assigned reading; indeed, read without knowledge of the originals they are more apt to mislead than assist you.
